Welcome to the Psychology Visit Day 12:45-13:45

Studies on Attention

- The animation you are about to see contains black and white ovals moving around the screen.
- Please pay attention to the white ovals and count the total number of times one of them crosses the centre line.
- Write down your best estimate of the total number of crosses.

Inattention Blindness

Those animations were created by a third year undergraduate for her dissertation project.

Did you see anything unusual in either animation?

The hypothesis is that unhappy faces will be noticed more often.

Change Blindness

- The following slides will show two pictures which will keep swapping.
- Something will be different between the two pictures.
- Pay close attention and try to spot the change.
- There will also be a timer on the screen
- When you spot the change, write down the number of seconds it took you.

Welcome to the Psychology Visit Day 12:45-13:45

Change Blindness

- These animations were used by a group of second year students who wanted to look at the effects of age and contrast on change blindness.
- Their hypothesis was that older participants would find the black and white images particularly hard.
- They found that participants in their 40+ group were slower than those in their 18-25 group (approx mean 16 seconds compared with 10 seconds).
- They found no effect of colour and no interaction of colour with age.
